From: Crain"s Boston
To: Tony Ferrelli
Subject: Harvard, striking dining hall workers reach a deal
Date: Wednesday, October 26, 2016 8:13:19 AM

YOUR NEWS FOR WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2016

Harvard, striking dining hall workers reach a deal

The first strike at Harvard University in more than 30 years is over after about three weeks of dining hall workers marching around Cambridge to demand a minimum full-time salary of $35,000. Members of UNITE HERE Local 26 will get that pay, after a 12-hour bargaining session Monday. (Boston Globe)

Hospital hack compromises confidentiality at Baystate

A phishing scam at Baystate Health may have compromised the personal information of as many as 13,000 patients. The cyberattack, which occurred Aug. 22, made its way into the system via email to several Baystate employees. The hospital says they're making changes to workforce training as a result. (Boston Business Journal)

New England quilt startups tangled up in court

A Boston startup that makes quilts out of its customers' old T-shirts alleges that a Rhode Island company stole its trade secrets. Project Repat, which appeared on ABC's show "Shark Tank," is taking its issue with American Quilt to federal court. (BostInno)

Northeastern loans aim to help minority-owned businesses

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh joined Northeastern University officials to announce the school's new Impact Lending program, which will offer a total of $2.5 million to Boston businesses owned by women and minorities. The program will target 85 small businesses in its first two years. (Boston.com)

Stocks slip from 2-week high amid mixed profit outlooks

Nine out of 11 groups in the S&P 500 Index declined after blue chips including Caterpillar and 3M cut their estimates, overshadowing positive earnings at United Technologies Corp. and Procter & Gamble. Consumer confidence declined in October, adding to the downward momentum. (Bloomberg)

Microsoft expected to reveal Slack competitor next week

Microsoft Teams will be a web-powered chat service that helps teams of colleagues or school classes collaborate through group channels, private messages and video-chat capabilities. Microsoft has yet to acknowledge publicly that it is working on the service. Microsoft Teams is expected to be unveiled at an Office event in New York City next week. (The Verge)

AARP cites privacy concerns in suit over employee wellness programs

The social-welfare group for the retired contends that workplace programs designed to manage healthcare costs can lead to invasions of employees' privacy. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has given the green light to employers offering workers financial incentives for participation in wellness programs without fear of violating federal anti-discrimination laws. (Reuters)

Finra: Wells Fargo claws back more than $1M from broker claiming wrongful firing

Eric Zakarin must pay his former employer damages tied to compensation arrangements in a promissory note. Zakarin was terminated from the bank after helping a client repatriate currency from Switzerland to the United States without providing necessary documentation to U.S. Customs and Border Protection, according to the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority Inc. (Investment News)

High finance: Tech firms, investors budding up to cannabis

The massive growth potential of the marijuana business is attracting considerable amounts of investment money. In 2016 so far, the cannabis market has seen 184 capital raises totaling $666.3 million, according to Viridian Capital Advisors, a cannabis industry strategic and financial advisory firm. (Crain's)

AARP sues feds over employee wellness program incentives

The consumer group representing older Americans sued a federal agency on Monday alleging regulations allowing employers to promote wellness programs violates federal anti-discrimination and medical privacy laws. The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission released final rules in May allowing employers to hit workers with substantial penalties if they refuse to participate in wellness programs and hand over sensitive medical and genetic information. (Modern Healthcare)

IF I KNEW THEN…

"I was afraid of not winning, so I finished in last place. "

Rob Acker, CEO of Salesforce.org

Read More

MORE NEWS

Hugo Boss CEO wants to ditch luxury, return to menswear roots (Reuters)

Chinese bike-sharing startups race for dominance (Wall Street Journal)

Chipotle running TV ads for first time since 2012 (Ad Age)

Jewelry's shotgun wedding sale shatters response expectation (CNN)

$14.7B settlement to trigger 475,000 VW buybacks (Reuters)

TRENDING: Intel Capital | Sumner Redstone | IBM Watson | Volkswagen | Airbus

UP LATE

Video: Gaga Takes the Wheel

Lady Gaga joins James Corden for the latest installment of Carpool Karaoke, driving through Los Angeles singing her classics and tracks from her new album, "Joanne."

Feedback or questions? Contact us.
Email editor | Customer Service | Advertise with us

Subscribe - Crain's offers newsletters in 30+ cities.

This e-mail was sent to tferrelli@ci.somerville.ma.us.

To ensure delivery of our newsletters to your inbox, please add crains@crainalerts.com to your address book.
Manage My Account | Unsubscribe

© 2016 Crain Communications Inc
1155 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, MI 48207 United States
For photo attribution information, click here.
Corrections | Privacy Policy | Terms and Conditions

Business News Just Got Personal™

Connect with Crains Logo

@CrainsBoston